EDMONTON HAS SOME FINE CITIZENS

The Lehigh Herald disclaims responsibility for the article appearing in its columns in which the A. & G. W. proposal is attacked as involving "the construction of a line from Edmonton on the northern frontier of Canada, three hundred miles further toward the North Pole, through an absolute wilderness." This article was published in the first column on the first page. The Capital took strong exception to it and replied the Herald now says that it should have had an Edmonton date-line upon it, which was omitted by mistake. At any rate, continues the Herald, it is in the habit of expressing its own views only in the editorial column. We can quite understand the mistake about the date line, but this last statement strikes one as rather remarkable. So long as comment on public affairs that appears anywhere in its columns is not ascribed to a definite source, we cannot see how a newspaper can disclaim responsibility for it. The reader is influenced in the same way no matter on what page it is published.

However, we are glad to hear that the Herald doesn't really believe that Edmonton stands on the northern frontier of the habitable part of Canada and are inclined to believe that when it gets the different railway propositions, that have been mooted for opening up the country beyond this city straitened out, it will be quite prepared to support enthusiastically the building of the line to Fort McMurray as that which means more to the older part of Alberta than any other transportation project now before the province.

That it should have some misconceptions as to the territory north of Edmonton is not surprising. Nor would it be strange if, apart from the general merits of a railway scheme, it should look askance at it, only because of the fact that it would serve to build up a city, which is regarded by many of the people of Lehigh in the light of a rival. Such an attitude would be unreasonable. There is plenty of room for three or four large cities in Alberta and we don't believe the Herald would adopt so narrow and short-sighted a view. We only point out that, with local feeling as it is, in western towns, there would be nothing out of the way in Lehigh's trying to knock something which, while for the decided benefit of the whole province, would be of particular benefit to Edmonton.

But what are we to think of an Edmonton man who would send to a Lehigh paper, as the Herald declares was the case, a letter in which Edmonton was represented as being on the fringe of civilization with a wilderness between it and the North Pole? The statement was too strong for even the Herald to defend. We have in our midst a person who would deliberately make it and send it broadcast. To serve the immediate political purpose of injuring the government, he was quite willing to discredit the city and all the claims which it has been making upon the attention of the world for years past.

Will the people of Edmonton stand quietly aside and allow this campaign to continue? Are they going to let politics ruin the city? The matter is one that our civic authorities should investigate without delay. With a little effort the actual writer of this letter could be discovered. We already know quite well the circle of politicians by whom it was inspired.

THE C. P. R. BRIDGE

In May of last year Mr. F. W. Peters, who was acting for the C. P. R. in the negotiations with the city looking to an entrance into Edmonton, was interviewed. At a conference with the city authorities has just taken place.

"I am well satisfied with the result of the conference," declared Mr. Peters. "We are desirous of getting into Edmonton as soon as possible, and I think the council realized that, in return for the large amount of money that we will spend for our entrance, they should give us a fair deal.

"When will work on the bridge be commenced?" was asked. "I cannot yet name an exact date when we will start work, but it will be incorporated into the agreement to be submitted to your citizens. We will start work this summer sure, and the bridge will be completed before the end of 1910.

"I would not like now to name a definite date until I have discussed the matter with our engineers. It will be no delay however in getting to work.

"Much of the abutments will be finished during the fall and the piers will be put down through the ice during next winter.

It was six months before the by-law was finally passed. Mr. Peters, when he made the statement above quoted, knew that the city could not put the agreement through without some delay. As it was, the by-law was finally passed in order to allow work to be done on the ice during the approaching winter. But up to the present there has been no sign of activity except the driving of a few piles near the river edge. Does Mr. Peters expect that he has kept faith with the citizens?

What Others Say

Last Call for Lottie Collins

(New York Sun)

Lottie Collins, formerly a well known music hall artist, is dead in London. Did you ever hear a song called "Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-ay"? Lottie Collins was the girl who first sang that whimsical refrain in an English music hall. She was only one of a few hundred "serio-comics" until that night. The next day Londoners going sedately to business in the city hummed and whistled the chorus of a song whose popularity has never been exceeded. Lottie Collins, who had sung it in a new dress with her anxiety showing as she began, found herself receiving £20 a week from each of the four music halls at which she acted nightly, an astonishing sum of English money. Then president went by the board and the Gaiety Theatre in London engaged her to appear there as well as at the music halls. She made about $500 a week for months after month. Every music hall in London of course gave imitations, but none of them compared with Miss Collins.

"Ta-ra-ra boom-de-ay" was a topical song, the song the English delight in. Lottie Collins summed through the stanzas in an effective talky way and burst into the chorus in full swing. When she said "boom" it was a veritable boom, and the "A-a-a-a" was a shout that put the house in an echoing uproar. While the audience yelled the chorus Lottie Collins was executing a tumultuous dance, filled with striking poses.

That was in 1892, and by summer time it was unsafe for a person to whistle the song on the street. Charles Frohman engaged the actress to come to America at a sum which was guessed all the way from $500 a week to $1,200. This was an extraordinary sum to pay eighteen years ago for a song lasting less than twenty minutes. She appeared in New York at the old Standard Theatre. The lighting, like nothing kick and the mad whirl around a forty foot circle on the stage captivated the town. Miss Collins was with Mrs. Samuel P. Cooney in private life, with three little girls of her own, toured America, clearing, she said afterwards, about $25,000 in all.

Her famous song was traced at the height of its popularity away back to the troubadours by industrious antiquarians, but as a matter of fact it was written by Henry J. Sayers, in 1891. Introduced in a musical show, "Tuxedo" it was encored in New York, but due to the home one mailed a copy of it to Lottie Collins. She looked it over and decided to use it and evolved her own dance and frills.

Lottie Collins learned to dance in infancy, her mother having been trained for the opera, though she sang but four times before she married and retired. When eight years old Lottie Collins was appearing on the stage of the London music hall with her sister in a skip the rope dance and duet.

After the successful first visit she returned to this country several times, always with considerable success. Among the songs that she treated the public to was "Daddy Wouldn't Buy Me a Bow-wow."

Poisoning Your Baby

(Hubert McLean Johnston, in May Canada Monthly, formerly Canada West.)

In most towns milk is delivered in two ways, either in a can or in bottles. Of the two the can is infinitely more dangerous, requiring as it does, the disease-breeding ladle. The bottle, however, is dangerous enough. On your milkman's hands, on your own hands, on the hands of your children—of the maid in the kitchen—there are millions of germs. When you remember that a thousand—a whole colony—of these infinitesimal trouble makers, can cluster with ease on the point of a needle, you can imagine what a pair of hands look like under a microscope. Suppose your milkman picks up an empty bottle to fill at a dairy and happens to grasp it in such a way that his finger touches the inside. Or suppose when he is putting in the paper cap, his hand chances to rub the under side. Though that bottle has previously been sterilized and cleaned until it is spotless, the labor is all wasted—new bacteria have been planted in it. The only consolation one has is that the great majority of germs about us are not the germs of malignant disease.

Raw milk is unquestionably the greatest spreader of the Great White Plague. Tuberculosis in the adult is the last chord of the lullaby which was sung at the cradle of the infant. The Royal Commission on Tuberculosis in London, England, last year, definitely decided that consumption could be transmitted through cows' milk—a point which had previously been somewhat in doubt. Authorities state that all of the cows which supply the milk for the Canadian people, twenty per cent. have tuberculosis. Do you realize what this fact means?

Professor von Behring whose work on tuberculosis is practically pre-eminent in the medical world, says: "Of all the children who died between the ages of eleven and fourteen years of age within a given period, from diphtheria, scarlet fever, and other infectious diseases, seventy-five per cent. were found at the post-mortem to have been afflicted with tuberculosis." Their tuberculosis undermined constitutions were unable to resist the attacks of other diseases.

RUTHENIAN GIRLS' CLUB

The Ruthenian convent school on Piccad street was the scene of a pleasing entertainment on Thursday evening when the Sister Superior of the Ruthenian convent, assisted by a number of ladies, entertained the Ruthenian Catholic Girls' Club, a circle established some months ago for self-improvement and amusement. Rev. Father Hara of St. Joseph's Church, Rev. Father Lemarchand and Currier of the Church of the Immaculate Conception were present during the evening.

There were carried out, with intervals of conversation, a very enjoyable programme including songs and hymns by the senior girls, pretty kindergarten and motion songs by the juniors of Sister Joseph's class, and gramophone selections. Delicious refreshments were served toward the close of the evening, which was concluded with the hearty singing of "God Save the King."

There are now over twenty seniors in the membership of this Girls' Club which has classes in English, sewing and singing weekly. Officers and committees are to be elected next week by the girls themselves, who plan to help actively in the big Kermesse to be given this summer by the Catholic ladies of Edmonton to raise funds to build a convent for the Ruthenian Sisters. Since coming to Canada these devoted women have been living in a tiny log house, recently framed, over but still affording very inadequate and poor accommodation.

THE ALBERTA HUMANE SOCIETY

In submitting my report for the past month, I am pleased to say that letters have been received from Assistant Commissioner McFiee and Superintendent Cuthbert of the R. N. W. M. P. assuring the Society of their hearty sympathy in our work. Superintendent Cuthbert states that he will be glad to call the attention of the various detachments under his command to any cases of cruelty to animals which may occur, directing them to pay special attention to railway construction teams and to take such action as circumstances may justify. I am pleased to acknowledge the courtesy and prompt information supplied by Major Cuthbert at our Society's request.

In response to our letter to Mr. Laney, chief of the city police, asking that he should instruct his men to devote as much attention as possible to the enforcement of the law relating to the protection of animals, Mr. Laney replies that he will gladly investigate any cases that may be submitted to him, and I am in a position to know that the city police are rendering very efficient service in our cause, and are always prompt and reliable in their attention to this duty.

The city is to be congratulated in the possession of a police force which is second to none in the supervision of the treatment of horses working in the city, and the generally excellent condition of the horses is referred to frequently by visitors to Edmonton.

A horse on Jasper Avenue fell and broke a leg last week. The case was reported to the police and after inspection by Mr. Shearer, V.S., the horse was humanely shot by a member of the force.

Reports have frequently been made that farmers teams are often driven long distances to the market and arrival are tied up, sometimes for the whole day, in the hot sun, on the market square. Upon investigation, this has been found to be a fact, and it is very desirable that such neglect be discontinued.

In other cities of the size of Edmonton teams are not permitted to remain tied on the market but must be removed at once, and such should certainly be the rule here. Apart from the neglect of teams, it is not advisable that the centre of the city should be as it is now, littered with all sorts of refuse, which properly should be located in a barnyard instead of being distributed impartially through the streets with every passing wind.

Those who make use of the market for the sale of farm produce are able to afford to pay for food and shelter for their teams, especially in view of the fact that no market fees are charged by the city, a fee being invariably charged in all eastern cities. The necessity of installing watering troughs at several places in the city has been brought to the attention of Mr. McLean, superintendent of waterworks, and that gentleman advises me that one will be installed immediately.

Replying to our complaint made to the Department of Public Works in relation to the keeping of horses in damp and ill-ventilated places in coal mines, also to horses being worked in low places where their heads are injured by coming in contact with overhead timbers which they are unable to see in the darkness, a very bad case of which has been known to exist. Mr. J. Stock, Deputy Minister of Public Works, states that no report has reached him from the inspector of Mines regarding such matters, and I would recommend that the attention of inspectors be directed to this subject and that they be asked to embody such infractions in their official report.

This subject will receive further attention in the near future, as will

GET THE RIGHT ENGINE ON FIRST PURCHASE

YOU don't want to experiment with an engine. It's too expensive. Buy right the first time and your power troubles are over—at once and for all. The engine question isn't a hard one for you to answer—if you investigate thoroughly. For you will find I H C engines far superior. Others cannot compare in efficiency, simplicity, economy and strength.

Profit by the experience of those who are discarding other engines for the I H C. Buy an I H C line—and save the cost of a "one year" engine.

I H C Gasoline Engines

There is one to meet your needs exactly. For the I H C line offers wide choice. Ask the local I H C agent to tell you about these styles and sizes. I H C Vertical engines—made in 2, 3 and 25-horsepower; Horizontal (portable and stationary) in 4, 6, 8, 10, 12, 15, 20 and 25-horsepower; Famous air-cooled engines—in 1, 2 and 3-horsepower; Hopper-cooled—in 2, 2½, 3, 4, 6 and 8-horsepower; also sawing, spraying and pumping outfits.

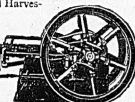

International tractors have been successful in every contest, winning the highest honors at home and abroad—an ideal plowing and general purpose tractor—made in 12, 15 and 20-horsepower sizes.

Whatever I H C engine you buy will save you a world of time, work and money. You can find no better power to run the cream separator, wood saw, feed cutter, churr, grindstone, fanning mill, thresher, shredder, and the many other machines on your farm. There is no better power to pump water. And the I H C does these things quickly, surely and cheaply. It is the engine that pays for itself—and pays the biggest dividend on its cost.

Investigate. Then judge for yourself. See the I H C dealer in your town. Or, if you prefer, write to International Harvester Company of America at nearest branch house.

HOW EDWARD MADE PEACE

Visited Every Important Court in Europe Except Russia.

WAS HIS OWN BEST AMBASSADOR

Conventions Were Arranged During his Reign With Japan, France, Spain and Russia.

London, May 9.—It has been said of King Edward VII. that he was his own best ambassador, and the saying is justified by the energy which his Majesty displayed in visiting practically every foreign sovereign of importance in Europe, with the single exception of the Czar, and the diplomatic activity evinced in the great series of treaties and agreements with foreign states concluded under his august supervision.

His first foreign visit was paid in 1891, to Germany, at the funeral of the Empress Frederick. Early in the following year the first treaty of alliance was signed between England and Japan, which involved a radical departure from the past policy of the United Kingdom. In April, 1903, the King paid his first visit to the Mediterranean, stopping at Lisbon, where he met the King of Portugal, Gibraltar, Malta, Sicily, and Naples, and at Rome staying some days with the King of Italy and paying a visit to the Pope.

The Entente Cordiale

In May of the same year he paid his momentous visit to Paris, on which occasion the foundations of the Entente Cordiale and the Anglo-French convention were laid. His Majesty was excellently received by the people of Paris, with whom he has always been popular. In August he was received by the Austrian Emperor at Vienna. At the end of March, 1904, the King visited Copenhagen, and in April of the same year the first result of the change in British foreign policy in Europe was the signing of the Anglo-French convention in London. By this treaty France gave England a free hand in Egypt, and received in return, a free hand in Morocco and certain concessions in other parts of the world. It marked the close of the quarrel between England and France, which has been a feature of European history for more than two hundred years. In June of the same year the King visited the Kaiser at Kiel, and made a short stay at Hamburg; while in August he proceeded to Marienbad and there received a visit from the Emperor of Austria. A further sign of the King's desire for reconciliation with Russia, which had been detected in the modification of the treaty between England and Tibet which was signed in September of this year. The British government decided to evacuate after three years the Chumbi valley, which the Indian troops had occupied, and recognize the territorial integrity of Tibet.

Treaty with the States

No effort of British diplomacy could have averted the Russo-Japanese war, which was in progress all through the year, though it is certain that the King's Ministers warned the Russian government of the power of Japan, and did all that was possible to bring about a pacific settlement. In December, 1904, a treaty with the United States was signed.

In early 1905 King Edward paid another visit to the Mediterranean, and twice met President Loubet. As there were reports that the German government intended to make war upon France on the question of Morocco, the British government let it be known that in the event of an unprovoked attack it would support France and act as her ally. The crisis passed with the sacrifice of the French Foreign Minister, M. Delcasse. A visit of the French fleet to Portsmouth served to demonstrate the solidarity of the two Western powers. In August, 1905, the second treaty of alliance between England and Japan was signed, extending the scope of the alliance and securing Japanese assistance under certain eventualities for the defence of the Indian frontier. It was followed almost immediately by the conclusion of peace between Russia and Japan.

The activity of the King was again shown in 1906. In March he met President Fallieres and his Premier, M. Rouvier, at Biarritz, and discussed with them questions of foreign policy. In May he paid visits to Athens (where he was received by the King of Greece) and Naples. In May he returned to England by way of Rome, Genoa, Turin and Paris. In August of the same year he proceeded to Marienbad for his cure, and on the way he had an interview with the German Emperor at Cronberg.

Convention With Spain

In February, 1907, he again paid a visit to Paris, remaining there for some time incognito, and thence proceeded to Biarritz, afterwards embarking on board the Royal yacht and sailing to Cartagena, where he met Alfonso of Spain. One of the results of this visit was the signing of a convention between England and Spain, guaranteeing one another's possessions. A similar treaty was concluded between France and Spain, the three powers of Western Europe were now linked together by close understandings.

After quitting Cartagena the King paid a visit to Malta, and then, in April, met the King of Italy, at Gacic. On his way back to London he met the President of the French Republic. In August he went to Marienbad, where he interviewed the French Premier, M. Clemenceau. Other important interviews with the German Emperor and Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria followed, while the Anglo-Russian Agreement of 1907 defined the possessions of England and Russia in Asia, and ended the friction between these powers. In November the German Emperor returned King Edward's visit and made a short stay in England.

The King travels and interviews gave him a personal knowledge of all the sovereigns and leading statesmen of Europe and enabled him to learn their point of view, while his next was such that it had magical influence in winning respect and confidence. Questions which in other days could only have been settled by a lengthy correspondence could be decided between His Majesty and the foreign governments.

Royal St. George's Society

On Saturday evening at a special executive meeting of the Edmonton branch of this society it was unanimously agreed to forward expressions of sympathy to the Dowager Queen Alexandra and King George, the following cables being dispatched: "The Dowager Queen Alexandra, London, England: Deepest sympathy from the Royal St. George's Society of Edmonton, Canada."

"King George Fifth, London, England: Sympathy and sincere loyalty from the Royal St. George's Society of Edmonton, Canada."

This Monday evening a special meeting will be held at the Oddfellows' Hall at 8 o'clock to consider what further steps are to be taken by the society. All members and visiting English and Welshmen are requested particularly to attend.

A MYSTERIOUS RUIN

Not all the world's riddles have yet been solved; there is still enough mystery left to give zest to existence. Attention has been called to the explorations of Zimbabwe, the strange ruin of South Africa. The Hon. James Bryce visited the spot some years ago, and tells of it in his book on the country.

Zimbabwe is the most curious relic of prehistoric antiquity in Africa. As one travels through the pretty country, suddenly, a mile away, he sees a piece of gray wall, and what seems like the top of a tower peering over the edge. This wall is of loose but well-trimmed and neatly fitted pieces of granite, surrounding an elliptical enclosure within which are other half-ruined walls overgrown with shrubs and trees. The strange solid tower, or pillar, is thirty feet high, built without mortar, of trimmed granite.

This is all there is to see. One paces to and fro within the enclosure, and measures the width and length of the passages between the walls. One climbs the great enclosing wall at the point where it is broken, and walks along the broad top. One looks, and looks again and wonders. But there is nothing to show whether the wall is three or thirty centuries old. There is no architectural style, no decorations even, save a simple pattern on the outside.

There is nothing to connect this temple, if temple it is, with buildings of any known race or country. And in this mystery lies the charm of the spot, and in this and in the remoteness and silence of the country, which seems as if it had always been as it is today.

One mark of modern man, and one only, is to be seen. In the middle of the valley, some three hundred yards from the great building, Mr. Cecil Rhodes erected a monument to Major Wilson and the thirty-seven troopers who fell on the Lower Shangani River, fighting gallantly, December, 1893.

KING GEORGE IN HIS HOME

New Sovereign is at his Best With his Children.

HE IS INTERESTED IN POLITICS

Has Been a Frequent Onlooker During the Present Session of Parliament.

London, May 9.—"A prince among the courtly young, a brother with his boys." Such is a not inapt description of the public and private life of the new King of Great Britain. For, admirably as he performs his official duties, it is with his children, in the school-room, in the playground, or in the nursery, that he is seen at his very best. The mutual affection and confidence which have subsisted between him and his royal father—an affection and confidence which have not always been too noticeable in the history of the relations of British heirs-apparent with British monarchs—have no doubt had their influence on his upbringing of his own children. It is whispered that he is, to some extent, under petticoat government; but if he is, he is by no means the only man in his father's dominions who has to submit, with more or less cheerfulness, to the rule of "the angel in the house."

Has Keen Interest

The King is said by those in close touch with him to be the most loyal of friends and the most delightful of companions. His manner is easy and free, without being free and easy, and he well knows how to be gracious without being condescending. He combines, as do few men of today, unaffected sympathy with undoubted dignity.

Perhaps one of his greatest charms is the keen interest which he takes in everything. "There is no man living," says one who knows him well, "who is less bored with life." Politics, in particular, have a peculiar fascination for him, though he is always scrupulously careful to refrain from any appearance of political partisanship. He is a frequent listener to the debates in both Houses of Parliament, and, in fact, during the session he has been one of the most regular attendants at Westminster, seated either above the clock in the House of Commons (which seat is, by an unwritten law, reserved for the Prince of Wales) or on the cross benches of the House of Lords, to denote that he belongs to no political party.

He is often to be seen at the theatres—"musical comedy" being the species of play which most attracts him—and, on occasions, at a music hall. And when the great exhibition, known as the White City, was at Shepherd's Bush, it was honored by his presence many times.

May Soon Have Racing Stud

The Prince's love for all forms of sport is notorious. He has not, up to the present, started a racing stud of his own, such as the late King maintained for so long, but of late he has been present at an increasing number of race meetings, and he is credited with the intention of soon doing so. He is a member of the Jockey Club. He is an expert angler and very fond of deer stalking. But shooting is the sport in which he most excels, and he is said by competent judges to be the best shot in England, which position in that country of game preserves argues no mean skill with the gun. At many of the big football matches, whether under rugby or association rules, he has put in an appearance, and followed the game with closest attention, and he has not seldom been seen at Lord's and the Oval, the two big London cricket grounds. He is a practised horseman, although the many calls on his time have not permitted of his making hunting a serious business. But when at his country home, York Cottage, Sandringham, he was often to be seen on horseback in the lanes accompanied by some of his children on their ponies.

If poor advertising mediums were ENTIRELY worthless they would not be dangerous! For they could not, then, make any appeal whatever to sensible advertisers.

But an advertising medium which has a LITTLE MERIT is, like "a little knowledge," a "dangerous thing." Some business men there are, always, who—for considerations of "cheapness," etc.,—will either rely upon such mediums wholly, or give them an absurdly large part in their advertising campaigns.

THE PORT OF MISSING MEN

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON

Author of "The House of a Thousand Candles"

Copyright, 1910, by THE ROBBINS-MERILL COMPANY

"The gentleman was merely explaining that you are mistaken, that he does not know you and never heard of you before, and that he has not been looking for you in the mountains or anywhere else."

"You are a liar, sir!"

As Shirley spoke these words very slowly and distinctly she questioned for the first time Chauvenet's position. Perhaps, after all, the mountaineer had a real cause of grievance. It seemed wholly unlikely, but while she listened to the man's reply she weighed the matter judiciously. They were in an unfrequented part of the mountains, where cottagers and hotel guests rarely explored. The mountaineer was smiling.

"Mountains folk are slow, and we don't know much, but a stranger doesn't ride through these hills more than once for the scenery. The second time he's got to tell why, and the third time, well, miss, you tell the little fellow that there isn't no third time."

Chauvenet flushed, and he ejaculated loudly:

"I have never been here before in my life!"

The man dropped the rifle into his arm without taking his eyes from Chauvenet. He said succinctly, but still with his drawl:

"You air a liar, seh!"

Chauvenet took a step forward, looked again into the rifle barrel and stepped short. Fanny, bored by the prolonged interview, bent her neck and nibbled at a weed.

"This gentleman has been in America only a few weeks. You are certainly mistaken, friend," said Shirley boldly. Then the color flushed into her face as an explanation of the mountaineer's interest in a stranger riding the hills occurred to her.

"My friend," she said, "I am Miss Chauvenet. You may know my father's house down in the valley. We have been coming here as far back as I can remember."

The mountaineer listened to her gravely, and at her last words he unconsciously nodded his head. Shirley, seeing that he was interested, seized her advantage.

"I have no reason for misleading you. This gentleman is not a revenue man. He probably never heard of me, still, do you call it in his life?" And she smiled upon him sweetly. "But if you will let him go I promise to satisfy your curiosity in the matter."

Chauvenet started to speak, but Shirley arrested him with a gesture and spoke again to the mountaineer in her most engaging tones.

"We are both mountaineers, you and I, and we don't want any of our people to be carried off to jail. Isn't that so? Now let this gentleman ride away, and I shall stay here until I have quite assured you that you are mistaken about him."

She signaled Chauvenet to mount, holding the mystified and reluctant mountaineer with her eyes. Her horse was bumping fast, and her hand shook a little as she tightened her grasp on the reins. She addressed Chauvenet in English as a mark of good faith to their captor.

"Oh, no, monsieur. Do not wait for me!"

But it is growing dark. I cannot leave you alone, mademoiselle. You have rendered me a great service, when it is I who should have extricated you."

"Try to do me a favor. It is a great chance that I am able to help. I shall be perfectly safe with this gentleman."

The mountaineer took off his hat. "Thank me, miss," he said, and then "Chauvenet. Get out!"

Don't trouble about me in the least, M. Chauvenet," and Shirley affirmed the last word with a nod as Chauvenet jumped into his saddle and rode off. When the swift pillion above had carried him out of sight and sound down the road, Shirley faced the mountaineer.

"What is your name?"

"Tom Selfridge."

"Whom did you take that man to be, Mr. Selfridge?" asked Shirley, and in her eagerness she bent down above the mountaineer's bare neck of tow.

"The name you called him isn't it? Is a queer name I never heard of."

on her—"It's like the army"—

"Armitage?" asked Shirley quickly.

"That's it, miss!" The postmaster over at Lamar told me to look out for him. He's moved up to the hills, and it ain't for no good. The world's out that a city man's looking for something or somebody in these hills. And the man's stayin'!"

"Where?"

"At the hunting club where folks come to go no more. I ain't seen him, but the world's passed. He's a city man and a stranger and got a little fellow that's been a soldier into 't army stayin' with him. I thought you'd know him, miss, honest to God I do!"

The incident amused Shirley, and she laughed aloud. She had undoubtedly gained information that Chauvenet had gone forth to seek; she had—and the thing was funny—seen Chauvenet well in explaining away his presence in the mountains and getting him out of the clutches of the mountaineer.

She referred at once to the affair with herself the fact of Armitage's whereabouts and keeping it from Chauvenet. It was a curious thing, and she gave her hand smilingly to the mystified and still doubting mountaineer.

"I give you my word of honor that neither man is a government officer and neither one has the slightest interest in you. Will you believe me?"

"Good, and now, Mr. Selfridge, it is growing dark, and I want you to walk down this trail with me until we come to the Storm Spring house."

"I'll do it gladly, miss."

"Thank you. Now let us be off."

She made him turn back, and when they reached a point from which they could look upon the electric lights of the Springs colony and where the big hotel and its plunges shined like stars at night. A moment later Chauvenet, who had waited impatiently, joined her, and they rode down together.

They were an odd and suspicious people, but they're as loyal as the stars. And please let me never mention the matter again—not to any one, if you please, monsieur?"

"You are an odd and suspicious people, but they're as loyal as the stars. And please let me never mention the matter again—not to any one, if you please, monsieur?"

throw aside her book, drew on a light coat and went out upon the veranda. A storm was steadily blowing down the hills, and the fitful wind tasted of rain. She walked the length of the veranda several times, then paused at the further end of it, where steps led out into the pergola. There was still a mist of starlight, and she looked out upon the vague outlines of the mountains with thoughts of its new and the gardener's work for the morrow. Then she was aware of a light step far out in the pergola and listened carefully to mark it, thinking it one of the house servants returning from a neighbor's, but the sound was furtive, and as she waited it ceased abruptly. She was about to turn into the house to summon help when she heard a sir in the shrubbery in the distance, and in a moment the stooping figure of a man moved swiftly toward the pergola.

Shirley stood quite still, watching and listening. The sound of steps in the pergola reached her again, then a rush of light came out on the garden a flying figure darted in and out among the walks. For several minutes two dark figures played at vigorous hide-and-seek. Occasionally grasses crunched under foot and shrubbery snapped back with a sharp whisper where it was caught and held for support at corners. Pursued and pursued were alike silent. The scene was like a pantomime.

Then the figures seemed to be turned. The bulkier figure of the pursuer was now in flight, and Shirley took both a moment, but immediately a dark form rose at the wall. She heard the scratch of the feet upon the wet grass as a man regained the top, turned and lifted his arm as though aiming a weapon.

There was a dark object struck through the air, and Shirley heard him squaring in the face of the house and over the wall, and Shirley heard him crash through the hedge of the neighboring estate. Then all was quiet.

"This is really fortunate, Miss Claborn. I owe your house an apology, and if you will grant me audience I will tell you."

He threw the cloak over his shoulder and fanned himself with his hat.

"You are a most informal person, Mr. Armitage. I was quite sure that you would be."

"I'm afraid I am. The most amazing ill luck follows me. I had dropped in to enjoy the quiet and charm of your garden, but the transients of the house. There was another gentleman equally bent on enjoying the pergola. He engaged in a pretty rough game, and because I was dealer of the game grew ugly and tried to put me out of commission."

He was still laughing, but Shirley felt that he was again trying to make light of a serious situation, and a further tie of sympathy with Armitage was not to her liking. As he walked toward the veranda steps she stepped back from him.

"This is impossible. It is not kind of you to come here in this strange fashion."

"In this way, forsooth! How could I send in my card when I was being chased all over the estate? I didn't have time to stop and call, and he laughed with a mischievous mirth."

That shook her resolution to deal harshly with him. "But," he went on, "it was the flower pot. He was mad because he lost him in the foot race and wanted to shoot me from the wall, and I tossed him a potted geranium—geraniums are splendid for the purpose—and it caught him square in the head. I have the knack of it. Once before I handed him a boiling pot."

"It must have hurt him," said Shirley, and he laughed at her tone that was meant to be severe.

"I certainly hope so. I most devoutly hope he felt it. He was most tenderly solicited for my health, and if he had really shot me there in the garden I would have had an ugly look. Armitage, this fellow, would have been identified as a daring burglar, shot while trying to burglarize the Claborn mansion. But I wouldn't take the Claborn plate for anything I assure you."

"I suppose you didn't think of us—all of us—and the unpleasant consequences to my father and brother if something disagreeable happened here."

There was real anxiety in her tone, and he saw that he was going too far with his light treatment of the affair. His tone changed instantly.

"Please forgive me. I would not cause embarrassment or annoyance to any member of your family for kingdoms. I didn't know I was being followed. I had come to see you. That is the truth of it."

"You must try to see me. You must come here at all unless you come with the knowledge of my father. And the very fact that your life is so much so persistently at most unusual times and in impossible places leaves very much to explain."

"I know that. I realize all that."

"Then you must not come. You must leave instantly."

Shirley walked away toward the front door, but he followed, and at the door she turned to him again. They were in the full glare of the door lamps, and she saw that his face was very earnest, and as he began to speak he flushed and shifted the cloak awkwardly.

"You have been hurt. Why did you not tell me that?"

"It is nothing. The fellow had a knife, and he—but it's only a trifle in the shoulder. I must be off."

The lightning had several times leaped sharply out of the hills, the wind was whirling the garden foliage, and now the rain roared on the tin roof of the veranda.

As he spoke a carriage rolled into the grounds and came rapidly toward the porte cochée.

"In, off. Please believe in me—a—"

"You must not go if you are hurt. And you can't run away now. My father and mother are at the door."

There was an instant's respite while the carriage drew up to the veranda steps. She heard the stable boy running out to help with the horses.

"You can't go now. Come in and wait."

There was no time for debate. She flung open the door and swept him past her with a gesture through the library and beyond into a smaller room.

Armitage sank down on a leather couch as Shirley flung the portiere together with a sharp rattle of the roll rings.

She walked toward the hall door as her father and mother entered from the veranda.

"Ah, Miss Claborn! Your father and mother picked me up and brought me in out of the rain. Your storm valley is giving us a taste of its powers."

And Shirley went forward to greet Ambassador von Martfeld.

"Chapter XVII"

A GENTLEMAN IN HIDING.

MR. CLABORN'S EXERCISES were here, and Shirley, her father and the ambassador talked to the accompaniment of the shower that drove in great sheets against the house. Shirley was wholly uncomfortable over the topic of affairs. The ambassador would not leave until the storm abated, and meanwhile Armitage must remain where he was. If by any chance he should be discovered in the house, ordinary excuses would explain away his presence, and as she pondered the matter it was Armitage's plight, his injuries and the dangers that beset him, that was uppermost in her mind.

The embarrassment that lay in the affair for her father and mother should be concealed in the house troubled her little. Her heart beat wildly as she realized this, and the look in his eyes and the quick pulse that quickened his face at the door haunted her.

The two men were talking of the new order of things in Vienna.

"The trouble is," said the ambassador, "that Austria-Hungary is not a nation, but what Metterlich called Italy—a geographical expression. Where there are many loose ends a strong group is necessary to hold them together."

"And a weak hand," suggested Judge Claborn, "might easily lose or scatter them."

"Precisely. And a man of character and spirit could topple down the card-board skeleton of a nation, and create for himself a new edifice—and a stronger one. I speak frankly. Van Stroebe is out of the way, the new emperor-king is a weakling, and I believe he should be tonight or tomorrow."

The ambassador lifted his hands and snugged his fingers.

"Yes. After him, what?"

"After him his secondly cousin Francis, and then a stronger than Van Stroebe might easily fall to hold the delectable members of the empire together."

"But there are shadows on the emperor's" replied Judge Claborn. "There was Karl, the mad prince."

"Humph! There was some red blood in him, but he was impossible. He was a hint of democracy, treason, rebellion."

Judge Claborn laughed.

"I don't like the combination of terms. If treason and rebellion are synonyms of democracy, we Americans are in danger."

"No, you are a miracle, that is the only criticism," smiled Martfeld.

MORE GOLD IN RHODESIA

New Field has Been Discovered in South African Colony.

Salisbury, Rhodesia, May 7.—A great deal of interest has been occasioned locally by the news of the discovery of gold in a new district of Rhodesia, viz., the Marandellas, about thirty miles southeast of Salisbury.

A number of claims have been pegged on what is unquestionably a freshly found belt. The formation is described as schist, but the properties are being pegged on a banded ironstone. Assays of the sample brought into Salisbury have shown good values, and some specimens, probably only very exceptional ones, have ranged as high as forty ounces to the ton.

The discovery is regarded as of considerable importance as the neighborhood is particularly well suited for successful working, and is one of the most accessible and healthy in Rhodesia. A large number of prospectors have left for the district since the news of the mining activity in Southern Rhodesia, especially in Mashonaland, may be gathered from the figures supplied by the mining commissioner for the period from January to December, 1909. In that time 438 prospecting licenses were issued by the Salisbury office, against 607 in 1908. In the Salisbury district alone 10,145 claims were registered, as against 790 in the previous year, the total claims now current being 110,688, as against 4797.

SUPPORT OF PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE

A correspondent writes: We have heard a great deal lately about the "unearned increment," and the principles of the famous Lloyd-George budget that has just been passed by the House of Lords. The Presbyterian Synod at its recent meeting in Edinburgh, took a statesmanlike view of the growth of this principle and planned that the future College should share in the general prosperity of the country, and particularly, the college as the fountain of the church's progress, should participate in the immense rise in the values of church sites and lands, when these are sold for more convenient sites in the growing cities of the West. The proposal seems utterly reasonable. For example, if a congregation in this city, or Strathcona, or West-Edmonton, or Lethbridge, or Calgary, or any fast growing town, sells out at a big profit in order to build elsewhere, the congregation cheerfully assign a fair percentage of its income for college purposes and in this way serve the whole country? The resolution of the Synod is as follows:

Inasmuch as the Province of Alberta is growing very rapidly in population and wealth, and may be expected to advance in these respects to a marked degree; and

Inasmuch as the value of the land and sites held by churches especially in growing cities have advanced with the general progress without any particular effort on the part of the people or members of the church: It is agreed that it should be an earnest recommendation from this Synod that in all cases where congregations dispose of their property at such greatly enhanced prices in order to erect places of worship at more suitable points that such congregations be earnestly requested to set aside a fair percentage of the profits of sales for the purpose of theological education within the bounds of the Synod, and for the equipment and endowment of the Hall in which the students are trained for the Presbyterian ministry."

Sunday School Baseball League.

By the formation of the Edmonton Sunday School Baseball League in the Y.M.C.A. last night the youth of Edmonton will have an opportunity to play the game under the best of conditions. The boys are enthusiastic over the prospects of playing in a well organized league and as a number of schools already have teams organized and others are under way the success of the league is assured. McDonald Methodist, First Presbyterian, Grace Methodist and Westminster will enter teams in the senior section, while the junior section will be comprised of teams from these schools besides All Saints, First Baptist, Robertson Presbyterian and others who have announced their intention of entering the league.

The league will be conducted by a board of control consisting of the president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer. All players must be regular attendants at Sunday school. Teams wishing to enter the league should have their entries in not later than Tuesday night, May 10, at 8 o'clock. Entries for senior teams, i.e., players nineteen years and under, are accompanied with membership fee of $2.00 and junior teams, i.e., boys 15 years and under, $1.00.

The following are the officers who were elected at last night's meeting: Honorary president, His Honor, Lieut. Governor, Buley; president, Rev. Robert Pearson; vice-president, Mr.

Farrar Sang for Prisoners.

Atlanta, Ga., May 9.—Miss Geraldine Farrar, the opera singer, sang yesterday to an audience of convicts in the federal prison here. Miss Farrar played her own accompaniment, and the response of the men admirably told her how appropriate were her selections. "Annie Laurie," "Coming Through the Rye" and operatic selections and a simple ballad. Charles W. Morse was in the audience.

Charged With Starving Father

Sherbrooke, P. Q., May 9.—Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Clarke of Island Brook, charged with culpable homicide in connection with the death of Mrs. Clarke's father, William Morgan, who had been staying with them. In an ante-mortem statement Morgan said he had not been given sufficient food and was fed on bread made of shorts.

Feeling run so high that the attorney general was notified and ordered Crown Prosecutor Niof to look into the matter.

About Town

The various St. Jean Baptiste Societies of the Edmonton district will celebrate the 24th of June this year at Riviere-qui-Barre.

Owing to the death of the King, this musical to have been held at the home of Mrs. G. W. Swaisland Tuesday evening has been postponed.

Mrs. E. K. Broadus, Strathcona, will give an address entitled "A group of old ballads," on Tuesday, May 10th at 8:15 in the Y. W. C. A. There will be no admission and all women and girls are invited. On Thursday, May 12th, the third and last of the series of addresses will be given by Mrs. Broadus on "Jane Austen's People."

Self-denial week will be observed by the Salvation Army throughout Canada this week. This is the Army's annual missionary effort, when all Salvationists will deny themselves in a practical way, thus helping along their missionary work which they conduct in so many different capacities. Special Self-Denial service will be conducted in the Citadel on Sunday and throughout the week. The local corps will raise $4500 this year, and will be pleased to receive subscriptions for this work.

Attempt to Kill Regent

Victoria, B. C., May 9.—Details of an attempt to assassinate the Prince Regent of China on April and were received by steamer yesterday. The Prince Regent, with some officers and attendants, was crossing a small bridge in the palace garden in Peking, when a bomb was exploded by means of wires. Two attendants walking in advance were killed.

Guards arrested fourteen Cantonese dressed in western clothing. Several other bombs were found in different parts of the garden.

Peary's Gift to England

London, May 9.—Commander Peary presented the Royal Geographical Society with one of the sleds which he took to the North Pole. He had named the sled "Beaumont," after Admiral Sir Lewis A. Beaumont, who was a member of the British Arctic expedition of 1875-76.

Werenka vs. Kostik

In the District Court this morning before his honor Judge Noel, the case of Nikolai Werenka vs. Nikolai Kostik was heard. The defendant had agreed to do a certain amount of breaking for the plaintiff, for which he was not to be paid until the whole contract was completed. Defendants machine broke down and he was six days repairing it, during which time plaintiff's remaining sack was burnt down. Plaintiff was awarded full value for this, but defendant contended for value of board for his men while the machine was being repaired. Judge Noel for counter claim for $10, parties to pay their own costs.

Mr. and Mrs. Chawin of Regina announce the engagement of their second daughter, Mary Alberta, to Mr. R. William Blair, formerly of Saltcoats, Scotland, manager of the Union Bank, Grassy Lake, Alberta, formerly of the Edmonton branch. The marriage will take place early in June.

Ex-Minister of Public Works W. H. Cushing of Calgary was today in the city on a visit to the general and recent as ever. He declared that he was in Macleod on private business only and was more interested in the sash and blind trade than in politics. He was widely interested in the Macleod situation and when told of the farmers' movement to nominate a legislative candidate his comment was "ah!"—Macleod Advertiser.

MANY KILLED IN EXPLOSION

of frame houses occupied the laboring population of Hull. Some of the houses were crowded with people. When the explosion occurred, many were caught in their flight from the building by flying rocks and either instantly killed or badly maimed. Others were killed in neighboring houses as the stones came crashing through the walls.

Three men were killed in the explosion, two sisters, named Carriere, aged 19 and 18 years, were killed at the supper table. A boy, seventeen years of age, named A. Cervante, was killed in a field some distance away by a falling boulder. Louis McCann, a laborer in the body mills was crushed to death by a falling stone as he fled down the C.P.R. tracks just to the north of the factory. M. Fabin, a young lad, who had been watching the fire, was decapitated by a flying rock. An old man named John England for the time, he died in his wife in the doorway of his house on Chaudiere street, was struck in the head and mortally wounded. He was being hurried away to the hospital in an automobile and when it was seen he was about to expire the auto stopped and the United States, France and other republics have telegraphed their condolences to the Dowager Queen and King George. These, however, are considered personal messages and have not been published here.

Both houses of Parliament had brief meetings Saturday afternoon. The Lord Chancellor administered the oath of allegiance in the House of Lords to the peers. The Speaker of the House and the Deputy Speaker being out of the country there was none empowered to preside over the House and immediately upon Home Secretary Churchill's motion the House adjourned.

Factory Complete Wreck

The factory itself was demolished, only a hole marking the spot where it stood. Many of the houses in the neighborhood were riddled as though by a battery of cannon. Two miles away in Ottawa, on Parliament Hill and on Sparks street, buildings shook in a terrifying way. Heavy plate glass windows came shattered to the ground and the terrified citizens rushed into the streets, some calling "it is an earthquake," others in their fright even thinking the earth had collided with the comet.

The factory comprised a number of small buildings in the outskirts of Hull. It was devoted to the manufacture of a specially powerful explosive for use in railway construction and similar work, and under ordinary conditions of handling extremely safe.

To Explore Cold Firds

Toronto, May 9.—A party of expert geologists and surveyors leave Toronto this week for the purpose of exploring and surveying the newly discovered cold district of the Metagenic River, which is about 90 miles north and 90 miles west of Cochrane, at the terminus of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway.

Little Appearance of State

An immense but quiet multitude pressed about the place for a glimpse of George V, who passed with little appearance of state. He wore an admiral's uniform and was attended by two officials from Marlborough House. He was greeted in silence and with bowed heads as he proceeded to the Palace, only a stone's throw away, while his two sons watched him from over the wall. The Lord Mayor of London with the Sheriffs in state coaches and robes of office made a grand show, but Viscount Morley of Blackburn and other eminent Privy Counsellors arrived in harness and pushed their way through the crowd.

Edward VII. still lies in the chamber where he died, his features are more natural than though he had suffered from a long illness. Dowager Queen Alexandra, King George and Queen Mary with the two boy princes and other members of the Royal family, visited the chamber Saturday afternoon. The Palace attendants and servants were admitted afterwards.

Funeral at Windsor

The plans for the funeral have now been determined, but the royal ceremonial and the public mourning will form the same procedure as when Queen Victoria died. The court will move to Windsor Castle on Tuesday and it is supposed that the obsequies will take place there. The body of the late king either to rest in St. James chapel or in a mausoleum to be built at Frogmore, near that which Victoria erected for herself and consort. More royal personages are expected to come to England for the funeral than followed Victoria's hearse. The German Emperor and Kings of Belgium, Spain and Portugal and possibly King Victor Emmanuel of Italy will be present.

All the crowned heads of the world as well as the Pope and President of the United States, France and other republics have telegraphed their condolences to the Dowager Queen and King George. These, however, are considered personal messages and have not been published here.

Church Services

A great representative congregation attended services in St. Paul's, the Bishop of London officiating. Many Catholics gathered in Westminster Cathedral while special services were held in various churches throughout the country.

Today the proclamation of George V's accession will be read in all the principal towns of the Kingdom. Trumpeters clad in scarlet and gold and escorted by life guards will enter the City of London and the Lord Mayor and Aldermen in robes of office will meet them at Temple Bar. This ceremony was expected to take place in London on Saturday and great crowds were expected to throng the Royal Exchange, waiting there for hours only to be disappointed.

THE DAY IN STRATHCONA

Budget of News from the City on the South Bank of the River

Mrs. R. H. Christie has left for Toronto, where her sister is seriously ill.

In the Knox Presbyterian Church Rev. Mr. Miller conducted the services yesterday as usual.

Miss S. Brickman of Wetaskiwin spent the week end in the city with Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Westbrook.

Lacrosse practice will be held at the agricultural grounds tonight at 7 o'clock.

Mr. H. Cooper has returned from Vegreville and has accepted the position as head of the dress goods department in T. P. Maloney's store.

The University exams, commencing on May 18th for the finals in arts. The paper in English IV. will be on the 21st, from 9 to 12.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Rankin have arrived in the city from Millet and will take up their residence in Mr. Rankin's home on Whyte Avenue W.

Dr. P. B. McNally went to Wetaskiwin on the afternoon train on a short visit to his brother, G. F. McNally.

Rev. J. M. Miller will address the league of the Methodist Church tonight at 8 o'clock on the subject, "Missionary Work in British Columbia."

A meeting of the executive committee of the city baseball league will be held on Wednesday night. The reports from the various teams will be heard. Also a list of the players of each team will be handed in.

In the Metropolitan Methodist Church Rev. H. E. Gordon conducted both services yesterday. The subject for the evening's discourse was "The value of little things in character building." The choir rendered the anthem, "Gently Lead, O Gently Lead Us."

On Saturday afternoon Mr. Holden, formerly clerk of the Bank of Commerce, was brought back to town on a Sunday. He was brought back on a registered letter belonging to the bank for his own private use. The letter contained $250. It is alleged that Holden signed at the P. O. for the letter and appropriated the funds. There are other charges against the young man as well, viz., issuing worthless cheques in various parts of the city. The preliminary trial was heard before Magistrate Downes this morning.

Politics for the time seem to be forgotten, the newspapers devote themselves entirely to eulogies and biographies of the late King and new King. With members of the Cabinet scattered in England and about the continent it has been impossible for the party in power to discuss its policy, but it is assumed that Parliament will adjourn after the budget is settled.

The ceremonies in connection with the opening of the Anglo-Japanese exposition for which Prince Fushimi, cousin of the Emperor of Japan, arrived Saturday. Have been given up as well as hundreds of other enterprises and entertainments great and small.

ORDERS CAME FROM OTTAWA

whether it would be necessary for him to take the new oath or not.

When the Capital saw him in his office this morning, he stated that he was not sure whether it was necessary for police magistrates to take the oath or not. He had looked up the statute, and it would almost indicate that they were. To be on the safe side, however, he decided not to hold court until he had been advised by the Attorney General's department as to the matter.

Mounted Police Are Safe

According to Supr. Clarke, it will not be necessary for the Mounted Police to take the new oath, as the oath of allegiance that they have taken reads "King Edward the Seventh, and His Heirs and Successors."

Programme for Militia

Col. Edgewood of the militia officers announced that the local regiments would parade to service on the day of the funeral.

After the service is over, the proclamation announcing George V. as King will be read to the men, and then the officers, with the required to take the oath of allegiance to the new King.

Mr. S. S. McRae has returned from a business trip to Winnipeg.

Rev. Father Jann left yesterday on a trip to the coast, where he will enjoy a well-earned vacation.

Sargent McInnis of Strathcona stands third on the list of those who will go to Bileys in June.

A meeting of the University baseball team is called for this evening at 8:15 at the University.

Miss Haykins, who teaches in the vicinity of Leclaire is visiting with Miss Irene Keane.

Miss Archibald of Red Deer is visiting in the city with her sister, Miss E. Archibald.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Jackson, parents of Mrs. R. B. Douglas, have arrived from Winnipeg and are visiting with Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Douglas.

The Roman Catholic denomination has purchased a site on the University road, adjacent across Mill Creek where a preparatory school of O. M. T. Academy will be erected for the training of boys into the order of Catholic missionaries.

Also a Roman Catholic College will be erected on the University grounds, affiliated with the University of Alberta. In this the regular theological work will be taken up.

The formal opening of Knox Presbyterian tennis courts was held on Saturday afternoon. A large number of players was present and a most enjoyable afternoon was spent. The courts were in good shape and were kept very busy from three o'clock until 8 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. S. S. McRae were served at six o'clock and an invitation to this was extended to the Ignatius Club. A very social time was enjoyed. The success of the afternoon is largely due to the convener of the social, Miss Carmichael and the members of the committee.

The Strathcona school board met last evening. Besides the regular routine business a deposition was heard from the part of East Edmonton district that has lately been incorporated in the Strathcona district regarding the situation of the school across Mill Creek. The site for this building, which is to be a four-roomed building, has not been definitely settled, though plans and specifications for the school will be called for. Also the site for the school on the flats was considered. This will be a one-room building.

MOTHERS MOBBED PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Had Become Panic Stricken Because of a Threatening Letter to a Teacher.

New York, May 9.—A threatening letter was received Friday at public school 109, Sachum street and Dumont avenue, Brownsville, according to one of the school teachers, who wasn't sure whether it came to Principal Schlockow or the janitor, Jas. McGivney. The letter said that if money for not forthcoming the two prettiest girls in the senior class, known as BB, would be kidnapped and a bomb projected through the handiest window.

So businesslike was the letter that every window in the school was locked and kept locked all day. A policeman guarded the children at play in the yard during recess. The letter fixed the hour of calamity as between 2 and 3 o'clock yesterday or 2 and 3 o'clock this afternoon. The school will be still more closely watched by the police today.

The news as to the threatening letter spread and throngs of women besieged the half dozen public schools attended by their children. At public school 109 Capt. Frank and his reserves had a hard time persuading the women to go home.

Robert Conins is principal of public school 149 at Sutter avenue and Vermont street. As it happened Jas. J. McCabe, district superintendent of schools, changed to be at public school 149 when the first lead outcries sounded. He went out doors and made a long speech to which nobody listened. Capt. Cristan Reimels came leading his reserves from the Miller avenue station. The women were strong in muscle as in numbers. The policemen did not use their clubs but they wrestled manfully and were hardly ever thrown.
